PUBLICATIONS

Brief description of published work

Most publications are related to Urban Social Geography. Produced since the mid 1980s, they draw theoretical insight from diverse sources like the French nouvelle sociologie urbaine – especially concerning issues related to collective consumption (the work of Jean Lojkine, Manuel Castells, Edmond Preteceille etc.)– or, more recently, the critical discussion of dominant claims on social polarization and socially divided cities within capitalist globalization, initiated by John Friedman and developed by Saskia Sassen). At the same time, these publications discuss the importance of contextual differences in terms of varieties of capitalism (e.g. the theoretical elaborations by Esping-Andersen on different regimes of welfare capitalism and their social impact or the work on developmental capitalism in East Asia) and also in terms of different historical development and urbanization paths. These theoretical contributions are also related to specific urban processes (segregation and gentrification). They focus on the context related complexity of segregation forms, patterns and their variegated social impact; on criticizing the stretching of the concept of gentrification which tends to cover all forms of urban renewal across the world. Finally, a significant contribution is related to segregation forms and their effects, with a focus on micro-segregation (in close spatial proximity) through the case of vertical segregation in the Athenian apartment blocks. These theoretical concerns have contributed to formulating research questions and to carrying-out projects focused on Greek urban space and, in particular, on the socio-spatial changes in the Athenian metropolis. An important feature of this work is the often-uneasy articulation between concepts and theories generated in core contexts due to their interpretative limits when applied to different contexts –like Southern Europe. The constant exploration of these limits leads to unveiling the contextual limits of concepts and theories presumed universal. Eventually, the contribution of the work communicated by these publications focuses on the critique of the dominant and implicitly universalized model of urban structures and urban development attached to the urban context of the English-speaking –and mainly the US– world.

The largest part of empirical investigations contained in this work is devoted to the analysis of social structures and inequalities and their dynamic change within the Greek urbanization process from the early post-war period until today. The main contribution of this published work is to have pinpointed and analyzed the different patterns and processes of residential segregation in Athens, the ways they are intertwined with broader socioeconomic and political processes and how they are related with urban processes in different contexts.

This body of work was developed using extensively large quantitative data sets (censuses and large surveys), processed with the use of statistical and mapping techniques. The outcome has permitted to depict a detailed image of social and spatial processes in the metropolitan area of the Greek capital. This quantitative analysis, developed more than 30 years, is related also to joint software application (database and mapping) produced in collaboration with the Greek Statistical Authority (ELSTAT) under the name of Panorama of Greek Census Data. This application aims, on the one hand, at facilitating the task of socio-spatial analysis and, on the other, was made freely accessible to a broad body of users (PhD students, researchers and the broader interested public). Another application, facilitated by the first one, was developed as a compendium and a forum of research entries on the social dimension of the city of Athens (Athens Social Atlas), part of an international network of urban social Atlases (Atlas Global Network).

The publications –subsequently listed in detail– are summarily presented in the following table:
